Folks say The Beaufort Inn is “where history is made” – and they mean it. Located in the heart of South Carolina’s Lowcountry, the stately coral Victorian stands proudly in Beaufort’s National Historic Landmark District, just a block from the Intracoastal Waterway. Circa 1897, the Inn was built as the summer home for a congressman. Its adjacent Rhett Law Cottage is where the articles were drafted that led to the Civil War. In the early 1900s, the town’s first library was started in what is now the Female Benevolent Society Cottage (can you say, “Please pass the sweet tea?”). But, darlin’, that’s not why you’ll want to stay here.

Surrounded by lush gardens and oak trees dripping with Spanish moss, accommodations include historic Inn rooms, luxurious garden cottages and suites, and large lofts and townhomes. Some rooms feature rainwater showers, cast iron soaking tubs, fireplaces, canopy beds, private balconies or porches, and separate living areas.

Mornings promise complimentary breakfasts in the Magnolia Room served atop linen-clad tables set with bone china, tall water goblets, and bouquets of roses. Fresh pastries, fruit, cereals, egg bakes, and apple-wood smoked bacon are just a few choices you may experience. Southern Graces Bistro serves lunch, dinner, afternoon tea, and Sunday brunch with an Antebellum flair. After an indulgent dinner, enjoy a glass of chardonnay and house-made praline crème brulee (that’s the Lowcountry twist!). Then kick back in a rocking chair on the verandah and enjoy the gentle sea breezes. Adjacent to the Inn, be sure to relax your mind, body, and soul at The Beaufort Day Spa featuring a wide menu of services.

Chill were filmed nearby. In fact, Julia Roberts and Jimmy Buffett, the king of chill, himself, have laid their heads at the Inn. Southern Living, Condé Nast Traveler, and Culture & Leisure magazines have all highly recommended this Southern grand dame, and American Historic Inns named it one of the “Top Ten Inns in the Country.” But don’t take our
